

Multipolar world According to Nixon!

It is when one nation becomes infinitely more powerful in relation to its potential competitor that the danger of war arises.
-Nixon, 1971

Impossible to believe but the defamed US President Richard Nixon, in the Watergate scandal, as far back as 1971 predicted the development of a multipolar world, ahead of this writer's prediction on June 6, 1982, the financial meltdown of the United States, and its resulting decline. Of course, Nixon did not fix a date of multipolarity as we did in the latter date, giving it as mid-June 2,008, which zinged and jangled around the world, most readers not believing it then and even later. Indeed, it was the financial crash that summer and fall (Pres. Bush, Jr., admitted it as December of 2,007), but the actual meltdown by all expertise became a reality that summer. Of course, we didn't call it multipolarity but in the terminology we considered at least four other nations to challenge our country – Soviet Union, Western Europe, China and India, which is now a reality, with Brazil in the 6th position.

It was 40 years ago to this day, July 6, 1971, that the 37th president of the United States, declared how we live in a plural world because US power has passed its apogee, something prophetic which no other US president has been willing to acknowledge, promoting Pax Americana to this very day, including our Black American African, Barack Obama, whose anti-war platform of CHANGE he abandoned within days of taking over the oval office, as I wrote in my essay the "American Finale," after my first of three recent trips to Dubai, including this one. [The trio of essays are attached, as a 3-part compendium, for on-hand quick reference!~]

Reflectively and profoundly, the Quaker President noted: "When we see the world in which we are about to move, the United States no longer is in the position of complete pre-eminence or predominance (and) that is not a bad thing.... We now have a situation where four potential economic powers have the capacity (to) challenge (the US) on every front." On that day, Nixon was addressing media executives in Kansas City, Missouri, by underscoring "in 5 years, 10 years, perhaps 15, but in any event within our time," America's global hegemony would be replaced by a multipolar world in which America, Russia, Western Europe, Japan and China would be the leading powers, thereby dislodging the United States from its thereto leadership. Moreover, he conceded that Japan and Western Europe were successfully competing with American companies on foreign markets, thereby calling the end of the American Century – the terrible 20th century our Our Lord.

Incredibly, Nixon continued to give his argument historical verity: "I think of what happened to Greece and Rome, and you see what is left – only the pillars. What has happened, of course, is that the great civilizations of the past, as they have become wealthy, as they have lost their will to live, to improve, they then become subject to decadence that eventually destroys the civilization. The US is now reaching that period." Surprisingly, Nixon's comments sparked no outrage in the public or by the national political machinery. Nowadays, he would have been castigated by the Bush and Obama supporters, while his prediction has come true... Imagine, a few months later he continued in the same vein, in TIME Magazine: "I think it will be a safer world and a better world if we have a strong, healthy United States, Europe, Soviet Union, China, and Japan, each balancing the other." Of course, we have insisted all along on total dominance, by hook or crook ever since the Panama Canal bonanza in world politics, when the sleepy prairie state came of age.

Nixon saw the end of American power pre-scientifically, if not a little early for his day, but now the finale is clairvoyant, be it multipolar or imperial, the decline is imminent. The morass in Afghanistan and Iraq, crippled by a $14 trillion debt to China alone and 15 million unemployment, home foreclosures by the millions, the fickle crowd mood might be rushing in on the horizon, though so far the plebiscite has been docile shocked by the rapid decline in the standard of living and hate of Americans abroad. Despite Nixon's warning way back then, Bush, Jr. and Obama have kept promoting Pax Americana on borrowed money and borrowed time. Nixon's balance of multipolar state was very profound, if contemporary society of man can manage to dismantle the American military-industrial complex before the planetary infrastructure, mismanaged in their keep, destroys society at large beyond recognition, as America has turned out to be less "indispensable" as disposable in every respect of planetary social progress. The seeds of social disorder, mayhem, killing fields and indiscriminate bombing sprees abroad, ever since the end of WW-II, "making war for profit," are about to be reaped as the nation faces the re-election campaign of 2012, next spring and summer, experiencing the final financial crash, and disintegration of the sociopolitical system in the post-election honeymoon phase (the first 100 of the new administration, when the media and public criticism is a "no-no" by national tradition). Even the predicted lady president will not be able to hold the strings of power as the social glue will rapidly dissipate, i.e. the social fabric is already ripping apart at the seams even though we don't see it—we're not supposed to as the powers that be continue to bamboozle the plebs and the world community of much more civilized nations at large. The two-hundred year old nation-state civilization streaker still in diapers, comparatively speaking, with the 5-millennia old Babylonia (Baghdad), is not qualified to administer our own treasury budgets much less as the self-appointed political caretaker of the international meridians. The insistence on world leadership is pathologic, genetically ingrained deviance by the American or Anglo-Saxon incompetent and aggressive ruling elite.
